MEMORANDUM FOR:

25X1A

1. Regarding the CODIB Task Team VII Final Report:

a. An analyst-to-analyst communication study must necessarily arrive at the same conclusion as all organizational communication studies, i. e., more is better.

b. The recommendations on page 14 demonstrate how weak the case is; the first three merely suggest that lists of names and organization charts be shipped about the intelligence community -- after that telephones and television would be keen.

2. I don't mean to be critical since I am sure the report only confirms basically what everyone knew in the beginning. Analysts that really want to talk to their counterparts have adequate means and facilities for doing so, and the analysts who are basically "loners" aren't going to avail themselves of organization charts, telephones, television, or anything else.

3. I see no particular technical interest for this Directorate, and I am sure OSI, FMSAC, plus OEL may have some views about the production aspects.
